Redtail Winter Outerwear

“The autumn leaves drift by my window...soon I’ll hear old winter’s song.” Time to combat those chilly winds, and cover up in style with a beautiful outer garment from Redtail Air Adventures Store’s winter apparel collection of knits and leather.

We now have smart leather jackets for both men and women. From bomber jackets to form-fitting silhouettes, these fine jackets are cut from very supple and soft calfskin leather. They feel as good as they look! And the women’s jackets can be paired successfully with either skirts or jeans.

Women’s winter knit cover-ups in three very diverse and exciting styles will compliment any wardrobe and can also be either dressed-up or dressed down. Wrap up in a white, richly embroidered southwestern cardigan with delightful fringe. A simple hooded poncho in soft brown will keep you incredibly cozy. For a more formal look, step out in an elegant black and white herringbone knit cape with arm slits.

What is the story on knitting? Knitting is such an ancient art that its origin is obscured by the mists of time. Because few pieces have survived the centuries, it difficult to follow its exact history. The earliest examples of true knitting are 11th century socks from Egypt. Their complex color pattern and variety of stitches indicate that the technique had come into being long before these socks were made.

The first appearance of knitting in Europe dates to the mid-13th century and was apparently the work of middle-eastern knitters working for Spanish royalty. By the 14th century, knitting women can be seen in paintings, and archeological finds show it to have spread all over Europe after the 14th century. Both wool and silk were the materials used.

Over the following centuries, patterns proliferated, and all-male knitting guilds came into existence. Shepherds knitted with wool from their flocks as they watched over them, creating warm and water-resistant garments. The first mechanical knitting machine was developed in 1589. Improvements and new inventions gradually shifted production from families to factories, and after the 1920s, knit outerwear entered the world of fashion. Since then, with wonderfully varied colors, yarns, and styles, as well as comfort and warmth, knits have established themselves as a staple of modern wear.

Style, warmth, beauty and practicality: Redtail Air’s knit and leather outer garments are irresistible. As the days grow cooler and covering up becomes critical, come in to see our lovely jackets and cardigans. Let Redtail cover you up for winter! Find us at 23 N. Main St. Open 9-9. 355-0889
