

The Sunset Grill is in the former home of “Uranium King” Charles A. Steen. In the early 1950’s, Moab was just a small farming community. Monumental places like Arches and Canyonlands were only accessible by a lucky few. In 1952 Charlie, a geologist and prospector put Moab on the world map, forever.

The Atomic Energy Commission was offering a $10,000 reward for finding domestic uranium. As a result, the whole United States was buzzing about the promises of Nuclear power. The Uranium Boom was not only noticeable in the lives of miners, but in many aspects of America’s culture. Hollywood films such as “Uranium Boom” and Walt Disney’s “Mickey Mouse” comics featured stories about the hunt for uranium. Life Magazine was consistently publishing articles about the search for uranium.
